S. border metropolitan statistical areas. According to government researchers, academicians, and industry representatives, both cyclical and structural factors have contributed to the decline in Mexicos maquiladora employment and production since 2000. Representatives of industry groups emphasized, and our economic analysis confirms, that the cyclical downturn in the U. S. economy has been a primary factor in the decline of the maquiladoras. However, industry sources and other experts noted that Mexicos maquiladoras also face increased global competition in the U. S. market, particularly from China, Central America and the Caribbean. The real appreciation of the peso relative to the dollar and key competitors currencies has heightened such pressure. Additionally, industry representatives indicated that Mexican government policies such as changing the tax regime applied to maquiladoras have created a climate of uncertainty for investors. Meanwhile, owing to commitments undertaken under the North America Free Trade Agreement ( NAFTA ), Mexico has now phased out some benefits to the maquiladora sector. Factors affecting the recovery of Mexicos maquiladoras include recent industry and government actions and the prospect of future Mexican reforms. The recent decline of the maquiladoras has added impetus to the ongoing evolution in the industry toward more sophisticated manufacturing and prompted the Mexican government to take several steps in support of the maquiladoras. For example, the Mexican government has greatly expanded the number of components that can be imported by maquiladoras and other firms with little or no duty assessments. However, government, industry, and other experts agree that additional fundamental reforms by Mexico, in areas such as energy and labor practices, are still necessary to restore the countrys attractiveness as...
