Not illustrated. 1906 Excerpt: .comparatively gardening. small cultivated areas are conclusive. On Still growing wild along the river is a the face of an immense black rock, standing plant from the fiber of which they made a in an isolated position far back from the coarse cloth. For food they probably river, are the imprints of the right hand depended largely upon maize, and the size and right foot of at least 20,000 people of of their granaries indicates a communal all ages, even the youngest children being represented. The most plausible explanation seems to be that the rock was used for a kind of census registration, possibly in connection with some religious ceremony. In making the imprints a white paint or cement was used, and the lines of the hands and feet are still distinct. The use of sandals is shown the imprints of the feet, tl great toe always standing out from the others. The souls long ago departed from the bodies of the sandal wearers, and from the silent mummies in the tombs comes no response in answer to the questions of the curious traveler. The patient labors of the archeolo gist, however, may be expected to reveal the story locked in the ancient records, and in the meantime a new civilization is springing up on the site of the old. The superstitious might feel justified in the belief that the region laid waste has been guarded by revengeful spirits. Many of the attempts to explore and...
