Excerpt: . I think I might try, said Mr. Munchausen, puffing thoughtfully upon his cigar and making a ring with the smoke for Angelica to catch upon her little thumb. I might try--but it will all depend upon whether you want me to tell you about Decoration Day as it is celebrated in the United States, or the way a band of missionaries I once knew in the Cannibal Islands observed it for twenty years or more. Why can t we have both stories? said Angelica. I think that would be the nicest way. Two stories is twice as good as one. Well, I don t know, returned Mr. Munchausen. You see the trouble is that in the first instance I could tell you only what a beautiful thing it is that every year the people have a day set apart upon which they especially...
